Dear Mr Nnamdi Okpala

I have reviewed the bankruptcy application you submitted on 15/10/2025.

As a result, I have approved your application and made a bankruptcy order in your name.

I have also uploaded your bankruptcy order to your online application and enclosed information on what happens next on page 2 of this letter. I strongly recommend that you take time in the near future to read through these documents.

You can find out more about the bankruptcy process by visiting:-

Yours sincerely,

The Adjudicator

What happens next: important information now you have been made bankrupt

Your bankruptcy will now be handled by the official receiver. The official receiver is an officer of the court who works for the Insolvency Service and whose job it is to manage bankruptcies.

I have given the official receiver notice that the order has been made. You'll shortly be contacted by the official receiver who will arrange to speak to you by phone or may ask you to attend an interview in person. At this time they'll be able to answer any questions you may have about the bankruptcy process. They may also ask you questions about information you provided in your application or ask you for more information.

You can find out more about the interview process in our Guide to Bankruptcy:
<https://www.gov.uk/government/publications/guide-to-bankruptcy/guide-to-bankruptcy>.

If the official receiver has not made contact with you within five days of this letter you should telephone the office and speak with the person dealing with your case. You can find out who that is from Insolvency Service Enquiry line. Their contact details are at the end of this letter.

Bankruptcy restrictions you have to follow

Now that you're bankrupt you have to follow bankruptcy restrictions. This means you can't:

- borrow more than £500 without telling the lender you're bankrupt
- act as a director of a company without the permission of the court
- create, manage or promote a company without the court's permission
- manage a business with a different name without telling people you do business with that you're bankrupt
- work as an insolvency practitioner or in a number of other public roles which ban individuals while they are bankrupt.

You can find a list of these public roles at: <https://apply-for-bankruptcy.service.gov.uk>. If you're concerned about whether your job will be affected by your bankruptcy, we suggest you speak with your employer.

It's a criminal offence to break these restrictions, and you might be prosecuted if you do so. The restrictions generally finish when your bankruptcy ends (you are 'discharged'). This is usually 12 months after you were made bankrupt but it can be longer if you don't carry out your duties under the bankruptcy proceedings or if you're found to have acted carelessly or dishonestly.

You can find more information about bankruptcy restrictions at:
<https://www.gov.uk/bankruptcy/restrictions>.

Managing your debts and assets

It's now the official receiver's responsibility to manage any repayment of your debts using your available assets.

The official receiver will review what assets you have, what they are worth and what you use them for. You will typically be allowed to keep items you need for your daily life, such as:

- items needed for work
- everyday household items (eg, clothing and furniture)

- vehicles you need for commuting to work or caring for children or relatives

However, if these items are valuable they can be taken by the official receiver and replaced with a cheaper alternative.

If you have extra income, you may also have to make monthly payments towards your debts for up to the next 3 years. The official receiver will speak to you about this, however, and will agree any payments with you.

You can find out more about how the official receiver will deal with your assets (including properties, pension, etc) in our Guide to Bankruptcy: <https://www.gov.uk/government/publications/guide-to-bankruptcy/guide-to-bankruptcy>.

Contacting your creditors

After reviewing your application and circumstances, the official receiver will use this information to prepare a report for your creditors (the people you owe money to) showing your assets and your debts. The report will tell your creditors about the bankruptcy and whether they are likely to get any payment. A copy of the report will be sent to your creditors in the next 8 to 12 weeks.

You don't have to let your creditors know that you are bankrupt, but if they contact you for payment you can tell them you're bankrupt and send or show them a copy of your bankruptcy order. A copy of your bankruptcy order is available by signing into your application.

After completing their report, the official receiver will convert your assets into money with which to pay your creditors. They will do this as quickly as possible, but assets included in your bankruptcy can be sold even after your bankruptcy ends.

Paying creditors now that you're bankrupt

Now that you're bankrupt you must not make payments to your creditors unless:

- they are secured creditors, like a mortgage lender
- the debts aren't included in the bankruptcy (like court fines, maintenance payments and student loans) - these are called 'non-provable debts'
- you owe money to the Department for Work and Pensions for budgeting or crisis loans taken out after 19 March 2012

If you rent your home, you do have to keep paying the rent, and you also have to pay any new debts not included in your bankruptcy.

Listing your bankruptcy

It's important that creditors are able to confirm that you are bankrupt. Because of this, your bankruptcy will be recorded in the:

- London Gazette, which can be found at: <https://www.thegazette.co.uk>
- Individual Insolvency Register, which can be found at: <https://www.insolvencydirect.bis.gov.uk/eiir/>

Your bankruptcy will be removed from the Individual Insolvency Register three months after your bankruptcy ends.

How bankruptcy affects your credit rating

Your bankruptcy will appear on your credit records for 6 years from the date the bankruptcy order was made.

Once the 6 years have passed, we suggest you check your credit records to make sure your bankruptcy has been removed. If it hasn't you should contact the credit reference agency to have the record amended. You may need to give them confirmation of your discharge from bankruptcy.

You can find out more about proof of discharge at:

<https://www.gov.uk/bankruptcy/when-bankruptcy-ends>

How bankruptcy affects your bank account

Because you have been declared bankrupt, your bank may freeze your bank account. Any money in the account will be an asset claimed by the official receiver for paying your debts.

If the account is frozen, once you have spoken with the official receiver they can release money:

- for your daily living needs
- to the other person in a joint account

If your bank account remains active don't use money for anything other than your essential daily living needs until you have spoken to the official receiver.

If you owe your bank money, they may use the money from your frozen account to pay this debt, even if it's related to a different account.

You can open a new bank account but you must tell the bank or building society that you're bankrupt when you open the account.

Some banks will let you use your old account after they've spoken with the official receiver. To find out more, you should talk to the official receiver and your bank.
